

Tēnā koutou e ngā mēma o te rūnanga o Te Pūtea Rangahau a Marsden,

The Marsden Fund | Te Pūtea Rangahau a Marsden is Aotearoa's premier research fund, established with the aim of increasing the quality of fundamental research across multiple disciplines. As a significant source of contestable research funding, it sets the standard for other funders. With this in mind, we are writing to ask you as the Marsden Council to show bold leadership on the issue of stipends for postgraduate researchers.

In the early 2000s, PhD stipends for Marsden Fund projects were resourced to appropriately acknowledge the expertise and skill prerequisite for PhD candidates to work on these significant fundamental research projects. In 2003, a full-time Marsden Fund PhD stipend was approximately 25% above minimum wage; as of 2010, it was 5% above minimum wage. In 2021, it is approximately 20% below the minimum wage, and in fact below the training wage¹. The full-time minimum wage is itself still below the cost of living in all major centres in Aotearoa, which has increased 25.4% since 2008².

Working full-time on a Marsden project means that to support themselves, students must either work second jobs, or rely on support from family members or other sources. This limits their ability to dedicate themselves to these important and complex projects, impacts their personal wellbeing, and represents a significant opportunity barrier to participation in these projects by people with dependent family members, or who cannot rely on external support. Māori and Pasifika students are significantly more likely to fall into this last category, making this a clear equity issue and barrier to diversification of our research sector.

We are asking that the Marsden Council raise the minimum payable PhD stipend for full-time work on Marsden grants to the equivalent of living wage after tax (currently $39,000 p.a.), and hereafter consider this relationship when setting stipend amounts.

Additionally, the maximum Masters' stipend amount for full-time work on a Marsden project is now functionally equivalent to the Jobseeker allowance. Masters' students are still contributing to projects, having already completed a university qualification. Their current stipend levels present all the same wellbeing, equity, and quality issues as the PhD stipend. We ask that either the stipend is raised to the PhD rate, or Masters' students are no longer supported by Marsden projects.

The Marsden Fund remains Aotearoa's most significant funder of blue-sky research, and we believe it is extremely valuable for early career researchers to be involved in this through their postgraduate studies. We hope that by making this change, you can signal to academic institutions that postgraduate researchers are valued as a core part of our research system, and the worth of the research they do is truly acknowledged.
